Come Up And See My Etchings

There is not much room for dignity in an active war zone – or beyond for that matter. Some celebrity victims will be exploited their entire lives. In some cases, with their enthusiastic participation: Phan Thị Kim Phuc, the girl in the 1972 Vietnam napalm photo, on Monday [July 4] escorted 236 refugees from the war in the Ukraine. To whip up lurid publicity, Phuc's iconic Associated Press photo, in which she runs with her napalm-seared body exposed, was etched on the private NGO plane that flew the refugees to Regina. While there is a widespread belief that the famous image documents an American war crime, the photo shows nine-year-old Kim Phuc running with her brothers and cousins, followed by South Vietnamese forces, down Route 1 near Trang Bang after a South Vietnamese plane accidentally dropped its flaming napalm on its own troops and civilians on June 8, 1972. "Kim, 59, a Canadian citizen, said she wants her story and work for refugees to be a message of peace. With her husband, Bui Huy Toan, she travelled from Toronto to board the humanitarian flight. The refugees, mostly women and children from across the Ukraine, are among thousands of Ukrainians that Canada has provided humanitarian visas in the wake of Russia's invasion of their country. Millions of Ukrainians have fled since Russia attacked on Feb. 24. Almost 5.5 million have registered with humanitarian organizations in Europe, according to the U.N. … Canada is among many Western countries offering Ukrainian refugees safe haven. The founder of the NGO Solidaire, Argentinian philanthropist and pilot Enrique Pineyro, piloted the Boeing 787. Oscar Camps, from the Catalan NGO Open Arms was also aboard." Ottawa's White-Hating Witches' Cauldron of "Anti-Racism" Bubbles Over, Burning All In Sight

Let's be quite clear: "Anti-Racism" is a code word for anti-White. It's not ethnic pride and hostility to neighbours which is human nature among most peoples that it fights: It is any manifestation of European pride or identity. Anti-racism (i.e. animosity toward Whites) is big business in Ottawa and is heavily funded by taxpayers of European descent. In the woke world of anti-European ideology in Ottawa, the European founding/settler people fund a mss of defamatory propaganda programmes and endless apologies.

Out of this corrosive mix, meet the new poster boy for government funded hatred. He hates Europeans, Jews, French Canadians, Blacks and native Indians. Oh, yes, he's a Palestinian who only became a citizen in 2020, having called Canada an "apartheid state". Meet Laith Marouf who heads the Community Media Advocacy Centre (CMAC) which snagged a $133,822 grant from Heritage Canada, jointly run by Argentinian "Heritage" (OUR heritage?) Minister Pablo Rodriguez and Housing, Diversity and Inclusion Minister Somali, Moslem Ahmed Hussen -- you can't make this stuff up -- to develop an anti-racism strategy for the media. CMAC, which comprises Palestinian Laith Marouf and his wife Gretchen King-Marouf, an academic whose specialties include feminism and gender studies, has feasted on over $500,000 in federal grants since Trudeau came to power.

The National Post (September 3, 2022) picks up the story: " On Twitter, Marouf wrote, "You know all those loud mouthed bags of human feces, aka the Jewish White Supremacists; when we liberate Palestine and they have to go back to where they came from, they will return to being low voiced bitches of thier (sic) Christian/Secular White Supremacist Masters." ... " He called Irwin Cotler, a former Liberal justice minister and noted human rights activist, who is Jewish, the "Grand Wizard of Zionism," and said that he "looks like a dick without makeup. ... " He has disparaged a number of Black and Indigenous people as "house slaves"; and commonly uses the term "frogs" to refer to francophones, who he also claimed have an "ugly language" and an "IQ less than 77."

To make matters worse, a number of his social media posts arguably crossed the line into advocating violence, such as when he wrote that, "Life is too short for shoes with laces, or for entertaining Jewish White Supremacists with anything but a bullet to the head."

Marouf, in other words, espouses the very opinions that should be targeted by any anti-racism program worth its salt.

Yet, when news first broke about Marouf's blatantly antisemitic comments, Diversity Minister Ahmed Hussen tried to deflect the blame back on CMAC, an organization he had previously praised, saying that it needs to "answer how they came to hire" him. In reality, Marouf and his wife are CMAC's only employees.Until this week, among the only Liberals speaking out on this issue were Anthony Housefather, a Jewish MP from Montreal, and Michael Levitt, a former MP who went on to become president of a prominent Jewish advocacy organization."

The story leaves mud on almost all the wretched participants"

* Laith Marouf is a shameless hypocrite. He hates Whites and many others. Yet, he wanted to become a Canadian to sponge off the money from the hated European founding/settler people who built this land.

Laith Marouf hates Europeans & the Gov't has given him over $500,000 in six years

* The Canadian Government for granting citizenship to this person who hates us.

* Ahmed Hussen, the affirmative action Cabinet minister. First, in 2016 Trudeau appointed him as a big slap in the face to the European founding/settler people, the Old Stock (or Quebecois de souche) whom he despises. Here was a Moslem, Somali, refugee, immigration lawyer and head of the Canadian Somali Association being made gatekeeper. It was like appointing Jeffrey Epstein as principal of a Middle School for young girls. He promptly presided over the invasion through the Roxham Road, nearly 100,000 illegals! Now, he's Minister of Housing, Diversity and Inclusion (but, not, apparently of Europeans and OUR heritage)!In June, his wretched department handed out money to the free speech hating Canadian Anti-Hate Network, another grant catcher, to produce a propaganda booklet to fight racism in the schools. It declared that the Red Ensign was a "hate symbol".[See Canadian Immigration Hotline 375, June, 2020.] One doubts that Hussen, who has some responsibility for our "heritage" even knew what the Red Ensign is. [Ottawa is mad!] Now Hussen has presided over yet another anti-racist disaster with Laith Marouf. Yet, he'd been warned about Marouf. He'd been around Ottawa, hating Whites but slurping up our money for six years. Is Hussen stupid, or does he share the anti-White views for which he praised CMAC? He may also be blinded by Moslem anti-Jewish feelings.

Yet, he may be another example of the Ahenakew phenomenon. Chief David Ahenakew was a talented Saskatchewan Indian leader. He was the founder and first chief of the Assembly of First Nations. He helped create a native university in Saskatchewan. He didn't like White people and frequently made anti-White remarks. The press indulged him and treated him as a celebrity. All this came crashing down in 2002. He thought he was giving a reporter an off-the-record interview. He was lured into discussing things he'd observed serving with the Canadian Army in Germany in the 1950s. He said he'd been told the Jews had owned and run everything (obviously, an exaggeration) and that's why "Hitler had to fry 6-million." All hell broke loose. The press no longer indulged him as an outspoken guy. Fellow Indian leaders at first stood by him but were warned their grant gravy train would dry up. He was quickly abandoned by all but his small band and some White free speech supporters (Doug Christie, CAFE, Terry Tremaine). He was stripped of the Order of Canada. Eventually, he was acquitted of "hate" charges because of Doug Christie's able defence. He died in 2010 of cancer, a broken, reviled man. He had not recognized that there are privileged minorities in this country. As long as he was mocking Whites, that was fine, but, when he made remarks about Jews, he was crushed.

Hussen may be equally naive. Running down Whites, reviling our heritage, destroying our statues is fine for Ottawa. Fifty-two Christian churches were burned or seriously vandalized in 2021. It took over a month before Justin Trudeau mildly condemned the hate storm but said it was "understandable." (Understandable what? That it was somehow justified? Can you imagine if 5, let alone 53, mosques or synagogues had been torched?) If Marouf had only been making hateful comments about Whites, no problem. The remarkable thing is that the appalling Hussen was not turfed in the recent mini Cabinet shuffle.

* The media. While the media was in full howl over Marouf's slurs against Jews, there was no denunciation, even from good guys like Rex Murphy or the National Post editorials, of the slurs against Whites. Truly, in woke Globalist-ruled Canada, we are the Dispossessed Majority!

Temporarily, "anti-racism" is in bad odor, even in the press but only because it attacked Jews. For the moment the disarray keeps our rights safer.

The Tolerant Swedes

"A populist anti-immigration party has surged to become Sweden's second-largest political force after a national election dominated by fears of gang violence, which has given the once-safe Scandinavian country one of Europe's highest levels of gun violence. Overall, a conservative opposition bloc including the anti-immigration party, the Sweden Democrats, had an extremely narrow lead over the incumbent centre-left with 94% of the votes counted. Analysts expect the final tally will confirm a conservative bloc win, but the election was so close that electoral officials said they would not have the final result until outstanding postal votes and votes from abroad are counted. With eight parties contending for seats in the 349-member Riksdag, Sweden's parliament, none can secure a majority of 175 seats, meaning that laws can only be passed with different parties working together. The parties campaigned under two general blocs, one conservative and the other a centre-left group headed by Prime Minister Magdalena Andersson, Sweden's first female prime minister. The not-yet-final count indicated that the conservative bloc would have 175 seats and the centre-left would have 174. 'It is extremely close. Things can change, but I doubt it,' said Zeth Isaksson, a sociologist at Stockholm University, who added that votes from abroad are traditionally conservative. 'As it is now, it is more likely that the right side will win.'

One certainty, however, is that the result marked a success for the right-wing populist Sweden Democrats, which won its best result since entering parliament in 2010. The party's founders in the 1980s had links to fascist and neo-Nazi movements but over the past two decades it has worked to move to the mainstream under its 43-year-old leader Jimmie Akesson. Its transformation included changing its official logo from a torch to a flower and expelling the most radical members. Those who support it like its tough vows to crack down on crime and strictly limit immigration, while opponents fear that its historic roots make it a threat to Sweden's democratic identity. Mark Johnson, a 50-year-old Swedish finance worker, said while the party's strong showing was expected, it is still shocking for many Swedes because 'it's hard to understand that we would be taking such an obvious turn to the right, to the far-right even.' The Sweden Democrats, which won 20.6% support in Sunday's vote, according to preliminary figures, up from 17.5% four years ago, gained on the rising fears of crime in largely immigrant neighbourhoods. This year so far there have been 273 shootings, 47 of them fatal, according to police statistics. Those shootings also wounded 74 people, including innocent bystanders. Andersson's Social Democrats, who have been in power in Sweden since 2014, remain the largest party, even gaining slightly to take 30.5% of the vote Sunday, according to the incomplete results. Andersson said Sunday night it was obvious that the social democratic movement, which is based on ideals of creating an equal society and a strong welfare state, remains strong in Sweden. The Sweden Democrats wants to be part of a government, but this is unlikely to happen because there are parties in the centre-right bloc that oppose it, Isaksson said. Richard Jomshof, the Sweden Democrats' party secretary, said Monday: 'It is clear that we must be able to discuss ministerial posts. It is clear that we must be able to talk about the position of prime minister, speaker of parliament and the presidium positions in the various Riksdag committees.' But a senior member of the centre-right Liberals told Swedish radio Monday that it cannot allow the Sweden Democrats to be part of a government. Still, if the right prevails, the Sweden Democrats will have 'very strong leverage' and will push for some of its issues, like tightening immigration laws, Isaksson said. He said a likely outcome could be for the Sweden Democrats to end up outside a government but as supporters of it. In Germany, the far-right Alternative for Germany party congratulated the Sweden Democrats on 'their sensational success in the parliamentary elections.' France's [nationalist] leader Marine Le Pen also tweeted her congratulations to the 'patriotic' Swedish party, saying: 'Everywhere in Europe, people aspire to take their destiny back into their own hands!' Isaksson also ruled out a governing coalition combining the centre-right Moderates, which have been leading the centre-right bloc, and the Social Democrats. Such a coalition has not occurred since the Second World War. The Moderates dropped to become Sweden's third-largest party and won 19% support, based on the incomplete vote tally. However, party leader Ulf Kristersson on Monday appeared to be the most likely candidate to be the next prime minister. He told his supporters that he stands ready to try to create a stable and effective government. Andersson, a 55-year-old economist, became Sweden's first female prime minister less than a year ago and led Sweden's historic bid to join NATO following Russia's invasion of Ukraine in February." Immigration Elsewhere

You know what they say – "If liberals didn't have double standards, they wouldn't have any standards at all." The latest humiliating examples of progressive hypocrisy came from the elitist enclave of Martha's Vineyard, an island south of Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Last June, travel and lifestyle site Galavante covered some of the famous and powerful people who frequent the Vineyard, as it is called. The Obamas, the Clintons, Oprah Winfrey, Bill Murray and Spike Lee are all known to live or hang out there. On [September 14], Florida's Republican governor, Ron DeSantis, gave the affluent resort community a taste of the consequences of the open borders rich leftists advocate. DeSantis sent two planes with about 50 illegal immigrants to Martha's Vineyard. With this action, DeSantis fulfilled an idea he first advocated back in 2021. Many of the subsequent meltdowns, and amused reactions, were posted on Twitter. The Cape Cod Times featured Lisa Belcastro, coordinator of the Martha's Vineyard homeless shelter, who was sent out to make excuses about getting rid of their unexpected guests. In a video interview, Belcastro said, 'The difficult challenges are, we have, at some point in time, they have to move from here to somewhere else, right?' [Two days later, the shocking interlopers were already settled in a military base at Cape Cod.]

Progressives always want someone else to handle the problems their policies cause. Belcastro went on to claim there was no way for Martha's Vineyard to take in 50 people. The locale famous for sprawling estates, mansions and summer homes had the gall to claim there was no room or resources for the illegal immigrants. … Barack Obama once said, 'I do think, at some point you've made enough money.' In another example of progressive double standards, Obama and his wife Michelle then bought a Martha's Vineyard estate that listed for almost $15 million in 2019. There they have flaunted a lavish and privileged lifestyle. … The Obamas must not really be worried about global warming and rising sea levels if they spent that much on beachfront property. … The Obamas' mansion is reported to be just under 6,900 square feet. [Meaning] there should be plenty of room for 50 to have a more extended stay. But that would require some entitled elites to actually walk the walk, not just talk the talk of virtue signaling. It will never happen." (The Western Journal, September 16, 2022) Photos of the illegals show a lack of females, while the males – judging by hair-dos and whisker sculpting – look like gang bangers.

More Immigration Elsewhere

"Leaders from across the Americas, including Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, signed on [June 10] to what U.S. President Joe Biden called a 'historic commitment' to ease the pressure of northward migration. The agreement, the central accomplishment of the Summit of the Americas in California, commits Canada to spend $26.9 million this year on slowing the flow of migrants from Latin America and the Caribbean. The Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection also includes a Canadian promise to welcome an additional 4,000 migrants from the region by 2028, as well as a pre-existing plan to bring in 50,000 more agricultural workers from Mexico, Guatemala and the Caribbean. [Seems a curious way to discourage immigration.] Canada is already a beacon of hope for migrants from all over the world, Trudeau said during his closing news conference when asked why a G7 country is taking so few additional newcomers. Simply bringing more and more people in doesn't address the underlying issues of economic, social and governmental instability that compel people to pack up and leave in the first place, he said. 'It's not simply enough to say, 'We'll just keep accepting people.' We need to do that, and we will, because that's the country we are,' Trudeau said. 'But we also need to be making deliberate, targeted efforts to make sure people don't feel compelled, that the only choice they have is to put themselves and their families at tremendous risk in order to leave their communities in their country.' To that end, the government announced an additional $118 million for progressive initiatives aimed at improving the lives of people where they already live in Latin America and the Caribbean. That includes $67.9 million to promote gender equality; $31.5 million in health and pandemic response spending; $17.3 million on democratic governance and $1.6 million for digital access and anti-disinformation measures." (CBC, June 10, 2022) And that's it from Canada – social worker to the world. Wow, that will keep Pedro in Tegucigalpa

The Kids Are Alright?

"While much of the country is enjoying the summer, the federal government is quietly amending its immigration and refugee protection regulations. With only $62,000 set aside for both implementation and communications, it's clear that they're not wanting much public attention. And no wonder. As of Aug. 1, Canada is tightening the rules on which immigrant and refugee children are eligible to come to Canada with their parents. Until that date, unmarried dependents aged 21 and under could be included in their parents' immigration or refugee applications. Exceptions were made for full-time students over 21 who were financially dependent on their parents. Under the new regulations, the cut-off age is 18 and under, with no exceptions for students. According to Citizenship and Immigration Canada, 'The amendments to the definition of dependent child respond to government priorities of having an immigration system focused on Canada's economic and labour force needs.' Their own regulatory impact analysis statement cites evidence that the younger a child is when they immigrate, the better their long-term labour market outcomes. On average, they claim, Canadian education yields a higher financial return than foreign education. The economic evidence may stand, but Canada will likely lose out on some highly qualified immigrants who are understandably unwilling to move to a new country or continent without their 19- or 20-year-old progeny. What's more, the changes go against one of the official objectives of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act — to reunite families.

Still, economic migrants make the choice to come to Canada; the amendments will have a much graver impact on those with very little choice in their immigration — refugees and others in the humanitarian immigration stream. In fact, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees took notice when the changes were first previewed in the Canada Gazette last year. So did the Canadian Council for Refugees, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Refugee Sponsorship Agreement Holders Association, and the Ontario Council of Agencies Serving Immigrants. In total, 60 groups and individuals submitted written comments after the changes were first proposed. Most were in opposition. At the Canadian Council for Refugees' Consultation last year, refugee settlement workers explained the gendered dangers this would create in countries where women are oppressed. No longer in their parents' household, they could be forced to marry, face destitution or worse. One worker recounted a situation under the previous regulations where a 22-year-old daughter was the only remaining family member left in a new country (the neighbouring country where the family fled to make their refugee claim). The family pleaded with the minister of citizenship and immigration for an exemption, to no avail. Ironically, it was only after the daughter attempted to commit suicide that the situation improved. As a result of her new mental health issue, she could now be considered a dependent. With the age of dependency being lowered by three years, it's estimated that 7,000 young adults will lose their chance to come to Canada with their families next year. About 800 of them will be the children of refugees. This is what happens when we let economic motives determine our immigration policy. Of course, the government also claims the regulatory changes better reflect life in Canada, where — apparently — young adult children are fully independent by age 19. The Canadian reality is that most high school graduates are neither ready nor willing to make it entirely apart from their parents' financial, social and emotional support. In fact, 42 per cent of 20-somethings in Canada still live with their parents, and most have never faced war, famine or torture.. Adding a forced familial separation onto that load is not only unconscionable, it's unthinkable. But the government isn't asking us to think about it. The meagre communications budget allotted the change will not reach anyone but those who are no longer eligible to apply. Ashley Chapman is with Citizens for Public Justice, a member-driven, faith-based public policy organization in Ottawa." (Toronto Star, July 26, 2022)

CRIME WATCH

More From The Always Bent Programme

"A complex trial involving four Richmond residents accused of submitting false immigration documents and bribing a Yukon government official, launched in July, is continuing now in September and will continue in January and March. Following a five-year investigation called Project Husky, charges were laid in December 2020 against Tzu Chun Joyce Chang, 49; Qiong Joan Gu, 66; Aillison Shaunt Liu, 31; and Shouzhi Stanley Guo, 38. The judge heard from witnesses last week and, except for a break for the Queen's funeral [September 19], is expected to hear from more this week. Dates have been set to continue the trial in January and March. Federal prosecutor Gerry Sair said the trial dates had to be coordinated among the five lawyers. Chang and Gu are charged with misrepresenting 67 people as nominees of the Yukon Business Immigration Nominee Programme, a programme that allows potential immigrants to set up a business in the territory and, after two years, apply for permanent residency status in Canada. Liu and Gu are charged with misrepresenting applicants for permanent residency. Liu is also charged with knowingly using forged documents. Chang, Gu and Liu are all charged with offering a 'reward, advantage or benefit' [a bribe] to a Yukon government official, Ian David Young, or to his family, to help 'influence' the business immigrant process. According to Yukon RCMP, Young died in November 2020. Guo, along with Chang, is charged with one offence under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. The allegations against the four Richmond residents date from July 2013 to September 2016 and are alleged to have taken place in Richmond, Whitehorse, Yuk., and Sydney, N.S." (Richmond News, September 19, 2022)

Boomerang Babe

"A U.S. woman who repeatedly snuck across the Canada-U.S. border illegally to get to the Yukon, which she believed would be 'safe from terrorists,' has been jailed for two weeks after pleading guilty to a charge under Canada's Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. The 39-year-old U.S. citizen, was arrested Aug. 18 in West Vancouver after making repeated attempts to enter the country illegally from Washington State and being repeatedly escorted back to the U.S., according to federal Crown prosecutor Xiaoshan Zheng, who outlined the unusual case in North Vancouver provincial court on Sept. 15. Judge Joanne Challenger noted that the woman had attempted to enter Canada at one of the border crossings south of Vancouver four times in April and May 2022, but was turned away each time, as being 'inadmissible' to Canada. But on May 22 she 'walked around a fence' to get into Canada. She was later picked up and held in hospital under the Mental Health Act. The woman returned to the U.S. but in July was found again by RCMP just inside Canada on Zero Avenue – a road that runs parallel to the border. She was escorted back over the border to the U.S. but the next day was found on Zero Avenue again, said Challenger, and was issued a deportation order. Despite the order, the woman was found back in Canada a few days later, given a second deportation order and physically removed. On Aug. 10, she was arrested again inside Canada, this time at the Fairmont Pacific Rim hotel, where she was causing a disturbance. A third deportation order was issued. The U.S. woman was arrested for a final time, Aug. 18 in West Vancouver, after police received calls about a woman who appeared to be in distress. The woman gave police a fake name, then told them she was trying to catch a bus to get to the Yukon, where she would be safe from terrorists, according to the Crown. She has been held in custody since then. The woman's defence lawyer described her repeated attempts to come to Canada 'for no apparent reason' as 'obviously misguided.' The woman previously lived in various states including Florida, the Carolinas, Texas and Washington State, said her lawyer. She was previously ruled inadmissible to Canada because of a criminal record in the U.S. In sentencing the woman, Challenger told her she had already been given 'many chances' by police and border officials before she was charged under the Immigration Act, noting it was unclear just how the woman continued to be able to cross the border. 'You cannot ignore any deportation order,' said the judge. She handed the woman a 60-day jail sentence, with credit for time already spent in custody, leaving a further 16 days in jail. Challenger said the woman could have been given a longer sentence but noted her 'significant mental health issues' as a factor in the case." (North Shore News, September 16, 2022) We make that 11 times. May we not know the woman's name?
